Transform Your Ideas About Libraries

Libraries are much different now than those of the past. Today libraries are vibrant institutions where groups come together to solve problems collaboratively in an environment conducive to inspiring creativity and discovery. This environment is fostered by librarians with subject expertise who connect patrons to a vast network of resources, both physical and electronic, rather than simply pointing users to a card catalog or to a specific book on the shelf. CSU Libraries is at the vanguard of this transformation and reimagining of the library as a center of learning rather than simply a warehouse of books. Although we still offer designated places of quiet reflection and study, space dedicated for group study is in ever increasing demand, as well as more sophisticated computer and media labs. Moving forward to further consolidate the library as a center of learning there are hopes of moving the Writing Center, and other tutoring centers within the Library. This means that students working on research papers would have easy access to resources and the ability to have their papers reviewed conveniently in the same building. Similarly, a student struggling with math homework could easily walk across the hall and receive help from a qualified math tutor.

Recognizing the many roles libraries now play across student learning and their importance for academic success, this year's theme for National Library week is "Libraries Transform." Please join us the week of April 10 as we celebrate with a number of events including a 3D printing demonstration! Also, consider dropping by to speak with one of our subject librarians about new and exciting resources that are continually evolving here within the CSU Libraries.

For more information on upcoming events related to National Library Week, see page 7.

What's Hot in the Archives

The CSU Archives is continually acquiring new collections to support faculty and student scholarship. Some of the most interesting new collections received in 2015 include:

International Trombone Association

In 2014 the Archives acquired the records of the International Trumpet Guild, and in 2015 the International Trombone Association donated their records to the Archives. These two collections dovetail magnificently placing the CSU Archives as a premier music research institute in the world.

Litho-Krome Company Records

Litho-Krome, a locally founded company that revolutionized the printing industry, closed in 2015. Before closing, the company donated their records to CSU. In the collection are a number of artifacts and art prints showcasing the lithographic printing techniques pioneered by the company.

Historic Westville Records

CSU Archives has formed a partnership with Historic Westville to care for their records. They have already transferred a large portion of their material, with more to come after the move to Columbus is completed.

Gloria Sampson's Historic Churches and Temples Artwork

Gloria Sampson's watercolor paintings document architecture and religion throughout Georgia showcasing some of the state's oldest and most interesting churches and temples. In addition to her paintings, sketches showing her process and methods are also part of the collection.

Jon Craig Papers

This collection of papers primarily documents Jon Craig's experience during World War II. The bulk of material consists of letters, photographs, and sketches. Craig used his time abroad as an opportunity to study local cultures with many of his photographs and sketches documenting local life in the Pacific theater.

Nuckolls Family Papers

Letters from the Nuckolls family show their life in Columbus during the mid-19th century. Their business activities as well as the family's experience during the Civil War are both large parts of the collection.

Sample of Jon Craig's artwork depicting local life in Fiji. The caption reads: "Woman selling shell necklaces, Fiji Islands," May 26, 1943.

Sid Kaminsky Donates 1,200 Recordings to Music Library

The Music Library recently received a large donation of principally jazz recordings from Sidney Kaminsky of Columbus. Other areas represented in the collection include some popular blues, New Age, rock, and original motion picture soundtracks.

Mr. Kaminsky, a former President of the Columbus Jazz Society, hosted a program on Georgia Public Radio for 12 years and, previously, on KCLU in Thousand Oaks and Santa Barbara, CA. We are thrilled to be adding 1,200 CDs and 80 LPs to our collection!

Gimmick? No, It's Mc-not-one! — The McNaughton Book Collection at CSU

CSU Libraries has been participating in the McNaughton lease plan since 2012. McNaughton is a subscription service with Brodart Book & Library Services Company that focuses on fulfilling the needs of modern libraries. Through this plan, CSU Libraries leases popular adult books, fiction and non-fiction, on a rotating basis. In turn, this allows CSU faculty, students, and staff to check out any of these titles for three weeks with their CSU ID cards! The display of McNaughton books is located on the first floor of Schwob Memorial Library on main campus.

Some of the McNaughton books currently available for checkout are:

- Saban: The Making of a Coach
- A More Perfect Union: What We the People Can Do to Reclaim Our Constitutional Liberties
- Whoopi's Big Book of Relationships: I Sucked at a Lot of Them So Now You Don't Have To
- Black Flag: The Rise of ISIS

- Linda Jones, Head of Technical Services

New Electronic Media Resources: Medici.tv and Kanopy Streaming

The CSU Libraries is happy to announce two new electronic resources free for you to use. Both of these offer access to vast media databases of audio and visual material.

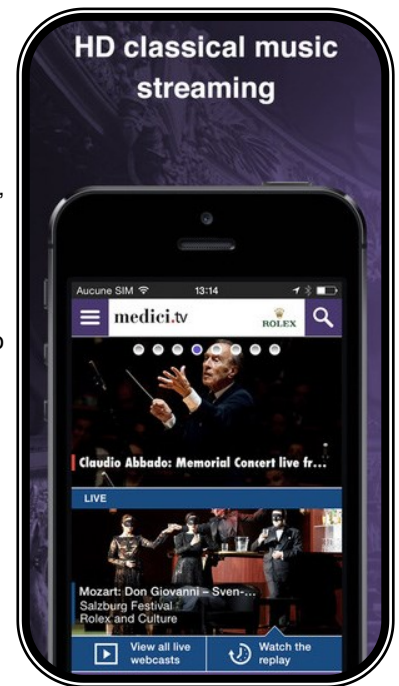

Medici.tv

Medici.tv is the largest online collection of classical, world music, and jazz music videos in the world with an ever-growing catalog of over 1,600 on demand streaming films of concerts, competitions, operas, dance, documentaries, master classes, and artist profiles. This footage features internationally renowned musicians from the past such as Maria Callas, David Oistrakh, and Mstislav Rostropovich as well as current artists Gustavo Dudamel, Anna Netrebko, Bryn Terfel, and CSU's Alexander Kobrin. In addition to archived footage, hundreds of live events are streamed annually from leading international festivals and major music venues such as Carnegie Hall, Lincoln Center, Teatro alla Scala, and the Walt Disney Concert Hall.

This new digital media resource supports in-depth study across the arts and enables students to explore repertoire, technique, choreography, historical studies, production, and different interpretations as well as discover the intersection of the performing arts with other disciplines such as education, politics, and international studies.

Students and faculty may browse for videos by performer, composer, conductor, type of performance, movie director, and musical period; or conduct a keyword search. Access medicitv on your Mac or PC from the GALILEO homepage, or other digital devices via mobile app. Off campus access will require authentication with your Novell username and password.

Kanopy Streaming

Kanopy is a new on-demand film streaming database. Sometimes called "Netflix for Colleges" it provides access to over 26,000 films. The service has been praised by universities with over 12 million students and faculty across the globe using the service. Kanopy's collections include products from leading publishers with titles from PBS, BBC, Criterion Collection, Media Education Foundation, and more.

CSU Libraries Support Sustainability Using Your Donations

Improving stewardship through sustainability is one of the top priorities of the university's strategic plan. CSU Libraries has worked diligently, using a number of initiatives to manage our resources more efficiently, and to increase the amount of material we recycle. To date, CSU Libraries has recycled more than 13,000 pounds of books, over 300 pounds of VHS tapes, 150 pounds of 3-ring binders, and is currently working with state and local vendors to recycle metal, plastic, and electronic products. This has been made possible largely due to the generous donations of books and other materials we have received over the years.

Once books are donated to the CSU Libraries, they undergo an inventory and review process as our subject librarians consider them for our collections. Those books not placed into our collections are then added to our annual library book sale. For well over a decade, CSU Libraries has been hosting an annual book sale as a way to recycle donated books. This event benefits both students and community members with inexpensive resource materials while yielding a small amount of revenue for library needs. For years, books not sold were either retained for the next year's sale, or donated to local charities. Books which were damaged, moldy, or outdated had to be thrown out as there were no other options available at the time, and eventually ended up in the city landfill. However, a chance to pair up with a local company presented itself, allowing us to recycle these books rather than send them to the landfill.

Nearly three years ago, an outside vendor, Caraustar, who had already been working with the CSU Printing Services for years, proposed a recycling plan for us. The idea was for the library to collect and store unusable books which would later be transported to a pulping mill where they would eventually become cardboard of various grades. This notion was very appealing as the landfill alternative was taken out of the picture and it helped to complete the donation cycle. So, in 2013, CSU Libraries partnered with Caraustar to begin recycling books, and in the process, began receiving outside donations from local Columbus patrons, the Muscogee County Friends of Libraries, the Columbus Ledger Enquirer, and other local businesses. Though the original vendor relocated its Columbus facility to Atlanta in 2014, CSU Libraries has continued to keep the donation cycle going. In 2015, CSU Libraries partnered with Goodwill Industries to not only recycle books, but other donated items such as VHS tapes and 3-ring binders.

This is an ongoing commitment we are truly excited about as we continually work to make the donation process as green as possible, and “minimize waste and optimally recycle material resources to protect natural systems” as outlined in our Library strategic plan. CSU faculty, staff, and alumni have a large part to play in this as well. Please consider donating your books and other media to the CSU Libraries. All donations are tax deductible.
